

Vincent WAN 尹揚明 (b. 1958.2.2)

Actor

Originally named Wan Chi-sing and born in Macao, Wan is a native of Dongguan, Guangdong. He apprenticed under his father as a metal hardware worker when he was young. He made his film debut when Nam Yin and Ringo Lam brothers invited him to play a cameo role in Wild Search (1989). Shortly after, he played the lead role China Ming in Rebel from China (1990). With his debut role as a gangster, the macho-looking Wan often found himself being typecast as bold and aggressive characters, such as the tough revolutionist in Shanghai Heroic Story (1992). His most remarkable roles came from Love Among the Triad (1993) and The Tragic Fantasy – Tiger of Wanchai (1994) as the gang leader. However, there is also a sensitive side to his rough and masculine screen persona, such as the nightclub bouncer in Call Girl 92 (1992) whose relationship with a call girl lingers between friendship and love; and Brother Bill of the fictional Hung Hing Gang in Young and Dangerous IV & V (1997–98) who has a love-hate relationship with Sister Thirteen. He also played cop characters who wander between good and evil, such as in Legendary Couple (1995) and Chinese Midnight Express (1997). In 2000, he made his self-starring directorial debut with The Warning Time.

Apart from films, Wan took part in television series including Vengeance (1992) and Racing Peak (1993). After 2000s, he starred in a number of low-budget films, such as The Young Ones (2001), and started a production company with actor Tommy Wong Kwong-leung. After 2007, he went in for business and continued to cameo in movies, including Isabella (2006), Wong Ka Yan (2015), and Trivisa (2016).